Live in Peace

Callousness is how some people try to find their way to peace. But what they think is peace is really an imposter. Making yourself indifferent to the world around you might numb the senses but it does not bring true peace. True peace doesn't come through withdrawal; rather, it is found in living in and through difficult circumstances while recognizing that we don't have to allow those things to make us anxious or afraid.

We are called to peace, not reclusiveness. We are called to find peace without indifference, which often means our peace must be found through things like mercy and compassion and love.

Peace does not come through toughening ourselves up to be unaffected by the world. To be unmoved. No. Peace comes while still being moved by things that should move us. It is found through our connection with the world around us through our recognition that there truly is One who is sovereign over all of it, who at the end of the time will have every knee bow and tongue confess to His Lordship...and we are His. We can be people of peace - not because all is well or not because we learn to ignore it - but because this world belongs to Him and by faith we live in the present. We live with the knowledge of light. We can have peace because we know that God will right all wrongs and makes all things new.

If you find your soul hardening and your heart calcifying against the world in order to distance yourself from it, please reconsider. Peace can be found because we have a relationship with the Peacemaker.
