The Importance of Connecting

Do we believe teaching Jesus to those who are lost is the most important task facing us today? I hope so. Jesus told us in the gospels, "Go into all the world and preach the gospel." If Jesus isn't being taught, the world is not going to change. If there is any hope it is in Jesus. Do we really believe that? If we do, our most important task becomes connecting people with the gospel. If we fail to connect, what value is our message? What do I mean by the term "connect"? I mean we must be able to share in a way that makes our audience want to listen. Paul said he became all things to all men so that by some means he might win some. Paul was willing to adapt in order that he have opportunity to share Jesus with the masses. Should we do any less? The most important task facing any church any disciple-maker is making sure that Jesus is taught effectively to as many people as possible. The question then is, "How do we most effectively connect with as many as we can in order to share the message of our Savior?" Let me offer a few suggestions that we can consider as we go about the master's business. Avoid an attitude of arrogance. Obviously we believe that the things we hold dear about God are correct. Yet it is important to be careful that we not come across as all-knowing and allwise. An arrogant attitude will close the ears of those who need to hear God's message. Those who possess an arrogant heart tend to believe they live on higher ground than others. They don't want to lower themselves to the level of other people. They want other people to come to them. This builds an attitude that says, "If we preach it they will come." Unfortunately, they won't come. We have to find ways to go to them. Don't assume we are all starting at the same point. A church sign read, "This is a Bible-driven church." If you were part of the fellowship of that given group this sign made perfect sense. To the stranger driving by it could mean many different things. If we are going to connect we must start by making sure we are beginning at the same place. Be willing to listen. Landon Saunders used to teach that the most important thing to do in a community is to listen to the needs, and find a way to fulfill them. He said that once we know the needs, we have a place to begin. Today we may call that our place to connect. Care about people. This suggestion might seem insignificant on the surface, but it really is the most important of all suggestions. Is it possible that we don't love our neighbors as we ought? Our religious neighbors are not our enemies. The people in our cities who do not share our faith in Jesus still possess souls. These are people who are of infinite value. Jesus wept over Jerusalem. Do we weep over our respective cities? If you see the value of people you will find a way to connect. Think about this. A young man sees a young lady he wants to date. The young man will spend time finding out as much as he can about her. If he has friends in common he will use their influence to bring them together. If he learns she is going to be at a certain place he will make sure he is there as well. When he is around her he will do all he can to impress her. What do we call this process? We might be tempted to say he has lost his mind! Really all this young man is trying to do is find common ground. He is trying to find a way to connect. If we really believe in what we are doing shouldn't we spend the same effort to connect for Jesus? (BVH Voice 2016)
